November President's Message

Friends,

As we enter November, we can all breathe a little easier. Late September and October were full of holidays. Now we're back to a more normal schedule. It is natural to want to lay back and take it easy, but don't take it too easy! We still have our full schedule of Shabbat services and we need your participation. Elsewhere in this Bulletin is reprinted a letter from one of our members, Cathy Block. Cathy came to Rochester last year to help take care of her grandchildren. You can read the nice things she has to say about us. The point I want to make is that our homey welcoming atmosphere and our participatory services can make a difference in someone's life. We've got no way of knowing when the next person will come along whose life we can improve, but with all of your help it will happen.

The one big event for November will be the second Finkelman Lecture. This special lecture is an annual event, in memory of Simon Finkelman, in recognition of his enthusiasm for adult education. This year we have selected Rabbi Goldberg to present the lecture, which will be given after the kiddush luncheon on November 14th. See the announcement below for more details. This is our major adult education event of the year, so please bring along your friends and come, enjoy, and learn!

Our plans for a lift to provide access to the building for our disabled members are proceeding. We have received $3,500 in pledges and donations so far towards the project (which is expected to cost a total of $11,700) and are seeking additional donations, so please fill out the pledge form on the bottom of page 2 of the bulletin and send your donation in today. In addition to the wheelchair lift several other building projects are underway. We have finished repairs in the kitchen and repairs to our roof. We also hope to have our front columns repainted before the snow flies. It's not too late to make a donation to the Yom Kippur Appeal to help with this work.

On sad notes, we want to send our sincerest condolences to our associate member, Leon Katzen, on the recent passing of his dear wife, Betty, and to our long-time member, Esther Vogelstein, on the passing of her mother, Ingeborg Vogelstein. They will be sorely missed by everyone who knew them. In addition, just as this bulletin was going to press, I was notified that another of our members, Dianne Hooker, has also passed away. Unfortunately, Dianne had been ill for some time and her passing had not been unexpected. Our thoughts go out to all of our members and friends who are in mourning. May G-d comfort them together with all the other mourners of Zion and Jerusalem.

As the leaves fall and the weather changes, come spend some quality time at services and events at BHBI. I look forward to seeing you in shul.

Leon Metlay

RABBI'S MESSAGE

By
RABBI GEOFFREY GOLDBERG

From the Rabbi's Desk
November 2009

Our lives connect to two cycles of times. The first is that of the Jewish liturgical year. Here, the holy is separated from the ordinary (or the “not yet holy”) in which Sabbath and Festivals are marked off from the ordinary working days of the week. In Modern Hebrew this yearly liturgical cycle of time is called maḥazor ha-shanah, “the yearly cycle.” Most of our liturgy, as put together in our siddurim and maḥzorim, is for the purpose of observing, commemorating and celebrating, this daily and yearly cycle of time. The second cycle of time is that of our own lives, from birth to death. In Modern Hebrew this is called maḥazor ha-hayyim, the cycle of life.

Judaism endeavors to integrate both cycles of time. I was very much aware of this while writing an article which will be published this month in AJS Review: the Journal of the Association of Jewish Studies, which I entitled, “Maḥazor ha-hayyim: Life-Cycle Celebration in the Song of the Ashkenazic Synagogue.” Traditionally it was the custom for a b’rit milah to be performed in the synagogue after the shaharit service. (Many synagogues have a special chair for the ceremony, known as kisei shel eliyahu, “the chair of Elijah”). Parts of the service are chanted responsively by the moheil and the sandak in which certain sections are chanted to a special melody, similar to the melody used for the blessings at the b’rit itself. This strikes me of a wonderful way of integrating the daily prayers that belong to maḥazor ha-shanah with the life-cycle occasion of the b’rit milah that belongs to maḥazor ha-hayyim. Here, music plays an integral role in synchronizing the two cycles of time by which we live our lives.

The power of ritual in maḥazor ha-hayyim came across strongly at the recent interfaith seminar I attended on the theme of pastoral counseling for reproductive loss hosted by the Religious Coalition for Reproductive Choice. Situations such as miscarriage, stillbirth, adoption or abortion carry with them a wide range of emotional feelings and the advice and sympathetic ear of religious leaders are often called upon. Sometime some form of religious closure is needed, in which ritual can play an important role. (By the way, I often felt more than a tinge of regret on behalf of some of the Christian clergy that they had no ritual comparable for our shivah in times of loss).

In the Conservative Movement there has recently been a concerted effort to address some of these painful life-cycle situations and provide then with some means of liturgical and ceremonial expression. For example, Moreh Derekh, the Rabbinical Assembly’s Rabbi’s Manual, provides liturgies for a miscarriage, a memorial ceremony for neonatal death and burial, a grieving ceremony following the termination of pregnancy, and for coping with infertility. With respect to neonatal death, the Conservative Movement has taken a far-reaching decision. Traditionally there was no burial or mourning for a child who died before the thirtieth day of life. In earlier times, when child mortality was very high, this was perfectly understandable, rational and compassionate. But nowadays, when child mortality is much less common, the rationale behind the traditional ruling no longer makes sense. Accordingly, the Rabbinical Assembly has now provided guidelines for burial and it has stated that “the family.... may be comforted through the traditional rituals of mourning....” I welcome the decision of my rabbinical organization.

A MESSAGE TO THE CONGREGATION FROM CATHY BLOCK

Dear BHBI friends,

I cannot adequately express how much being with you has added to my life. I have been brought further into the faith in my scant year with this congregation than I have since my conversion. My cousin, Barbara received her first honor ever while visiting here. She was so excited to learn her Hebrew name, to be drawn into the family, so to speak. I have quit shaking violently when called for a Torah reading (though still chant sans regard to guttural h's). I appreciate deeply your gracious welcoming, taking us "from where we are" (even if it should, perhaps, be further along), showing Winston there is a congregation in existence he can look forward to attending - on and on. I will miss you dreadfully between visits to New York.

With appreciation,

Cathy Block

DON'T MISS THE PRINCE OF KOSHER GOSPEL AT TEMPLE B'RITH KODESH ON NOVEMBER 15TH

Get ready for a moving experience – spiritually and physically – at the Joshua Nelson Concert, Sunday November 15th at 7 p.m. and help BHBI at the same time!

Joshua Nelson's cultural and religious background and extensive travels through Israel influenced him to pioneer a new form of music he has termed KOSHER-GOSPEL MUSIC - Hebrew/Jewish music with a soul feeling. Growing up in a black Jewish synagogue, Joshua decided to use the soul Hebrew sounds prominent in many black synagogues and take them to the outside world, blending Jewish Liturgical and African American musical styles. Through his unique talent, electrifying performances and profound commitment to spiritual music, Joshua is transforming new listeners everywhere. "I want to let people hear it and realize that it is not just good to listen to - it is good for the soul," said Nelson.

Nelson has spread the joy of spiritual music to audiences from New Jersey to Jerusalem, performing in concert halls, synagogues and churches, both solo and with such musical luminaries as Wynton Marsalis, Billy Preston, Aretha Franklin, and Stephanie Mills. Most recently, Joshua embarked on an extensive European tour that included stops in Sweden, Finland, Denmark, Holland and Germany, where he performed to standing-room-only audiences.

Tickets for the Joshua Nelson concert are priced as follows:

- Student $15
- General Admission $20 in advance, $25 at the door
- Family of 4 $50
- Patron $50
- Champion $100
- Benefactor $250

BHBI retains 20% of the purchase price of all tickets sold through our congregation. Tickets can be purchased and/or donations made by writing or calling the BHBI office at (585) 244-2060. Please order your tickets soon!
